

ELLE'S 30 PLACES TO INSTAGRAM IN 2019

Depending on who you ask, Instagram has either revolutionized travel or ruined it completely. On the one hand, it's a great motivator to stop scrolling, get outside, and go do! On the other, it can lead to a gnawing sense of envy—and, yeah, okay, overcrowding.

But going somewhere just “for the Insta” has gotten a bad rap. Since the advent of photography vacationers have tailored their adventures around getting the best shot. They'd show it off to family and friends—“Look, we went here! We did this thing! You should too!”

Now the message we get from Instagram is, “Look, everyone's going here! They're all doing this thing! You should too!” For ELLE.com's inaugural Places to Instagram we narrowed down the spots that are already dominating, or about to dominate your feed this year. See them in person, get the shot, or just stalk the geo-tag. In any case, the world is yours for the taking.

Nobody would dare throw stones at Puro Vik's glass houses: The nineteen houses at this luxury retreat each have three walls made entirely of glass, which allows visitors to see as much of the surrounding splendor of Chile's Millahué Valley as they desire. Take a bath in a transparent room, indulge in a grapeseed oil massage at the spa, or take a sip of the country's best red—you're in wine country, after all.—Estelle Tang, Culture Editor

Best time to get your shot: Golden hour, baby. Watch the sun rise and set over the rolling hills all around you from the comfort of your own glass villa.

Choice backdrop: Chez vous. You merely need to step onto your terrace to capture the nearby vineyards, mountains, and lakes. Or flex by taking the photo from inside the house.
